The Journal of Spelean History

Volume 39, No. 2, Issue 128
July – December 2005
Old post cards exist that show some of the named features of Dunbar Cave. Unfortunately, no postcard of the Willapus Wallapus has yet been located. If you go to Dunbar Cave keep your eyes open for the “Willapus Wallapus.” He is somewhere in Independence Hall.

On White Fish and Black Men: Did Stephen Bishop Really Discover The Blind Cave Fish of Mammoth Cave?

Aldemaro Romero
Department of Biological Sciences
Arkansas State University
P.O. Box 599, State University, AR 72467
aromero@astate.edu

Jonathan S. Woodward
3738 Middlebury College, Middlebury, VT 05753
jwoodwar@middlebury.edu

Some of the chronology of discoveries at Mammoth Cave, Kentucky, is marred by contradictory reports and legends. The first published reference to a blind cave fish (“white fish”) in Mammoth Cave appears to be by Robert Davidson in 1840; however the chronology given in his book is contradictory. We did archival and field research aimed at identifying the first person to have seen (and probably collected) this blind cave fishes at Mammoth Cave. We also researched all the known specimens of the two species of blind cave fishes ever found at Mammoth Cave to see if that information could provide evidence of which of the two species was seen first. We conclude that: (1) Davidson’s chronology in his book is probably wrong and that he did not visit the cave until 1838 or 1839; (2) it is possible that Bishop was the first person sighting the fish, but others cannot be definitely excluded from having been involved in this discovery; and, (3) that although there are two species of blind cave fish that inhabit the waters of Mammoth Cave, the first one sighted was likely Amblyopsis spelaea, also the first one to be recognized in the scientific literature. We finally conclude that the facts surrounding Stephen Bishop’s fame need to be further investigated under the perspective of the romantic movement of the mid-nineteenth century that gave rise to the “noble savage” mythology as well as on the perspective of race in the United States prior to the Civil War.

The Start of the Kentucky Cave Wars

John M. Benton
208 W 19th St., Huntingburg, IN 47542
jbenton@fulnet.com

Spelean historians are acquainted with the Kentucky cave wars and its many and varied feuds among the show caves of the region competing for the tourist dollars. Previously hidden in obscurity is the start of the cave wars. In 1871, David L. Graves, formerly of near Lebanon, Kentucky, leased the Mammoth Cave Hotel and grounds from the Croghan heirs. He was also the proprietor of the Cave City Hotel, and ran a stage line in opposition to Andy McCoy, an established stage line operator. Rival drivers were faced with assault and battery that went to court in 1873. A monetary judgment failed to solve