Physics professor leads research into laser uses

Laser. Have you ever wondered how they work? It’s a 1980s technology that continues to advance in the 21st century. Much like a camera, a laser is a tool that emits coherent light. This means that it emits a single color wavelength of light with consistent frequency, direction, and phase. Laser are used in various applications such as cutting and welding, data storage, and medical treatments. Today, we can find lasers being applied everywhere. For example, lasers are used in surgery, medical treatments, entertainment, and communication.

Dr. Leonardo Garcia, a professor at the University of Illinois, led a team of researchers to develop a novel laser application. They used a material called photonic crystal, which is capable of manipulating light in a unique way. The team combined the photonic crystal with a laser to create a new type of laser that can change its properties based on the surrounding environment. This new laser could have many potential applications in fields such as medicine and communication.

Garcia explains that this new laser can be used in various ways. For example, it can be used to create a new type of laser that can change its properties based on the surrounding environment. This new laser could have many potential applications in fields such as medicine and communication. The team plans to continue their research to explore the full potential of this new laser technology.

Watering won’t do much good, however, because the grass is actually just going dormant. “I wouldn’t water the grass unless you absolutely have to,” Ferree said.

Aeration and deep thought over the best treatments for your lawn is the key to success.

Insecticides, too, are another fungicide that appears as a secondary treatment. These are used to control and destroy the fungus that can attack bluegrass, ryegrass, and fescue, which can cause stress in the soil because of the heat.

September is a great time to aerate and fertilize, recommended for lawns across the region,” Garcia said.

But if your grass has “burned out,” it has just gone dormant, the best thing you can do is wait — wait it out. “It has just gone dormant, the best thing you can do is wait — wait it out,” Ferree said.

But he stopped short of assuring that it wasn’t a deliber-ate act.

Hemmertnik said he believed the matter was “absolutely” not connected to the pending 15th anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks — a sentiment Garfield again stressed Thursday.

“[There’s no evidence] that it’s related to 9/11 or a terrorist attack of any sort,” Garfield said. “On the basis that where they’re 10,000 to 20,000 people, any given day, personal safety is taken seriously and [the buildings] in which they have been decontaminated.”
