The impact of these performances and talks cannot be underestimated. A significant aspect of our audience comes from the region, from half a dozen or a dozen cities in the area, people who are not affiliated with SIUE. Plus we do some other things, too. When we are able to, we will distribute some free tickets to the Edwardsville High School or the Alton High School. Last year, Arts & Issues sold out the presentations by American documentary filmmaker Ken Burns and a tennis pro to the SIU Edwardsville "Tennis Greats".

Grandin was interesting because she didn’t have an agent,” said Andree. “I had just begun a relationship with the National Public Radio and knew who should be the future of TNR and I had to go after her because she was the future.”

Some events involve local participants, such as when Andree brought the Louisville Dance Ensemble in to perform with both SIUE students and students from area high schools.

Sometimes artists provide quite unusual, performances, interesting surprises the audience might not anticipate. For Simon Shauber, I received a lot of positive feedback on that because he is the type of artist you don’t see every day,” said Andree. “He is quite unusual.”

“On the other hand, The Langton Hughes Project was very political and said lots of different things on a lot of feedback on that when you are combing the music and the poetry.”

Arts & Issues chief Andree has had adventures

Business failure, job layoffs, recession, the performance of the arts is not immune to the economic climate. Tony Shashack said some businesses have charged 41-year-old Leslie McManus nearly $143,000 from city hall, “We have seen some businesses fail, and that puts us in a position to go to the arts community and say, ‘We need help in picking up the slack,’” said Shashack.

The city’s police chief says, “I have received calls from a business which is affected, and we need to be sensitive to the community.”
