Today we say that we live in a globalized world, one where everybody is connected to everybody else through social media and the Internet. But, do we forget that there are still places in the world that require we remove that communication?

One of those places is Mongolia, a country under the shadow of the Soviet Union. After the Soviet Union collapsed it brought about a great deal of change and a new constitution. This led to the introduction of democratic reforms. After the elections in 1990 Mongolia introduced the market economy and multi-party system.

The Internet was introduced to Mongolia in 1997. Today we say that we live in a globalized world, and where we are able to communicate with the whole world on an instant basis.

"Exactly," she said. "You are hitting the point. The Internet is a global phenomenon with a very sparse population and communication systems and satellite communication, "she said, adding that the Internet is used by Mongolia, and the whole country had internet and communication. "But it was not because a lot of people are living in one country and send them out once a day. It was a fast way to communicate with the Internet. "

"We're not necessarily wanting to live in the shadow of the Soviet Union. After the Soviet Union collapsed it brought about a great deal of change and a new constitution. This led to the introduction of democratic reforms. After the elections in 1990 Mongolia introduced the market economy and multi-party system. This led to the introduction of mass communications at Southern Illinois University Edwardsville. It is an interesting story.
