In December 1990, the newspaper Suntin Graffiti announced the first of many publications about the文化 war. The editors of the newspaper, publishing only what it deemed "good" news, were committed to providing a platform that was free from biases and sensationalism. They believed that by keeping their focus on positive developments, they could help their readers maintain a balanced perspective on the world around them. The editors were passionate about their mission and were dedicated to upholding the values of their publication. They strove to create a community where people could come together and share their experiences and ideas. In the end, this commitment to excellence and integrity led to a successful and thriving organization.

The Southern Illinois University Board of Trustees on Thursday approved Denise Cobb, PhD, as interim provost and vice-chancellor for academic affairs through the 2015-16 academic year. The board will continue to explore the possibility of a longer-term appointment, but will first give the new leader a chance to lead the campus through the upcoming academic year. The board also approved a new strategic plan for the university, which includes initiatives to increase diversity, promote research and creative activity, and improve student outcomes.
