In the last few weeks two films have been released that the surface seem to be unrelated in content, but are closely linked in their message. The first of these films is “Spotlight.” It tells the true story of how a team of reporters for The Boston Globe worked in uncovering a pattern of sexual abuse of children and its cover-up in Massachusetts by the Catholic Church. This investigative reporting earned the newspaper the 2017 Pulitzer Prize for public service. The movie is considered to be a very accurate representation and shows these how these crimes are recognized and dealt with in the church. The movie received wide acclaim not only because of its artistic merits but also because of the exposure of the facts.

The other film is “The Hunting Ground.” This is a documentary that had a limited theatrical release on February 25, but was broadcast by CNN on November 22. It deals with the issue of sexual assault on U.S. college and university campuses.

This documentary included not only numerous on-camera interviews with victims of these crimes but also interviews with former students on campus issues as well as former university administrators.

“The Hunting Ground” also included wide- scale activism, but also its share of negative criticism. The filmmakers had extensive interviews and mentions in the film, such as Harvard and Miami University. Most of the institutions claimed the movie to be inaccurate and taking sides with the victims. The release of this documentary has coincided with a rise of complaints by the media about sex assaults across campuses.

Dr. Almedor Romero Jr. continued in Page 1

Continued from Page 1

Cohol explained that last year Mwantu Building-Aid built animals for 96 children in the area. “We also want to see children’s libraries,” he explained. The disease is also able to visit Shriner’s Children’s Hospital.

“Only the center nearby is able to visit the hospital,” he said. “We are just as appreciative that we are able to meet the needs of our kids at our center.”

Best seat in the house

The students sit on the laps of their teachers, as well, during the Dec. 12 open house for the new Spaceship Park Heritage Museum. Photo for the Intelligencer.

In the last few weeks two films have been released that the surface seem to be unrelated in content, but are closely linked in their message. The first of these films is “Spotlight.” It tells the true story of how a team of reporters for The Boston Globe worked in uncovering a pattern of sexual abuse of children and its cover-up in Massachusetts by the Catholic Church. This investigative reporting earned the newspaper the 2017 Pulitzer Prize for public service. The movie is considered to be a very accurate representation and shows how these crimes are recognized and dealt with in the church. The movie received wide acclaim not only because of its artistic merits but also because of the exposure of the facts.

The other film is “The Hunting Ground.” This is a documentary that had a limited theatrical release on February 25, but was broadcast by CNN on November 22. It deals with the issue of sexual assault on U.S. college and university campuses.

This documentary included not only numerous on-camera interviews with victims of these crimes but also interviews with former students on campus issues as well as former university administrators.

“The Hunting Ground” also included wide- scale activism, but also its share of negative criticism. The filmmakers had extensive interviews and mentions in the film, such as Harvard and Miami University. Most of the institutions claimed the movie to be inaccurate and taking sides with the victims. The release of this documentary has coincided with a rise of complaints by the media about sex assaults across campuses.

Dr. Almedor Romero Jr. continued in Page 1

Continued from Page 1

Cohol explained that last year Mwantu Building-Aid built animals for 96 children in the area. “We also want to see children’s libraries,” he explained. The disease is also able to visit Shriner’s Children’s Hospital.

“Only the center nearby is able to visit the hospital,” he said. “We are just as appreciative that we are able to meet the needs of our kids at our center.”

Best seat in the house

The students sit on the laps of their teachers, as well, during the Dec. 12 open house for the new Spaceship Park Heritage Museum. Photo for the Intelligencer.