High school being haunted by zombies

The Twilight Zone was one of my favorite TV series when I was growing up. Of the 156 episodes, originally broadcast between 1959 and 1964, the one titled “The Change of the Guard” left a stark mark on me. It was about a teacher named Fowler, interpreted by Donald Pleasence, who, after being forced to retire, contemplates suicide because he does not feel he has made a difference in the world. Then he images going back to his classroom where the ghosts of a number of his former students show up and talk of all of their achievements while thanking him for teaching them values such as courage, ethics, self-egard, empathy, loyalty and honesty. The whole tone of the episode is reflective on the one hand and says, “Be ashamed to die until you have done something for humanity.” It is actually a quote from Horace Mann, an American educator and reformer who was one of the first to establish common schools in this country aimed at providing free education to all children who would become productive members of society.

This is a good lesson we all need to remember if we are going to be a teacher. Then, it is not a question that teaching, at all levels, is a noble cause. Nobody becomes a teacher because they want to become rich. Teaching has been a calling for many generations and should be so because they feel that they can make a difference in this world. However, sometimes that ceiling can be lifted by the Multi-State Scholarship Foundation.

Education as an enterprise is being assaulted on many different fronts and for many different reasons. Public education has been targeting less and less support by some politicians who seem to be star-struck by the thought of new, different and untested ideas. Fewer and fewer people seem to be so-called “think-tankers” who have not had direct experience within this field. The public at large is not sure what to think of some new ideas and are not sure if their tax dollars are being spent efficiently. The so-called “think-tankers” who have not had direct experience within this field are doing what they can to try to make education more appealing because, if there are not enough supporters, then there may be something else. On top of that, teaching as a profession has become the profession of choice for many people. A variety of positions are offered and the number of positions continues to grow. There are many new positions that are becoming available to educators.

Then we have to examine the question of what should be taught in order to produce educated citizens. Public schools have always had an educational goal to prepare students for life after high school. Many public schools are now setting their sights on preparing students for life after high school.
